The newly-formed Rastelli kitchen furniture brand – from the will of Renzo Rastelli (proprietor of Aran Cucine) - has introduced ranges designed by Ferruccio Laviani and Karim Rashid. The Kook kitchen from Karim Rashid features rolling shutters to conceal the LED-edge shelves and built-in hob and hood when not in use. It boasts pressure-opened base cabinets, also accented with coloured LED strips, with solid Corian used on the frameless doors.

Rastelli BELUGA

Contemporary style kitchen with island, design by Ferruccio Laviani

"This is a solid project, well defined but constantly evolving. I don't want this project to end only through images or certain compositions: I would like this project to be an introduction, a starting point". Beluga gets in Rastelli constituent scene as a composition made of sober elegance, able to perform the space where it is and giving rhythm with musical skill: Beluga is a real orchestra, able to tastefully combine lights and shades, voids and volumes, metals and natural essences. The composition plays two basic concepts: the former is the typical modern idea of considering the light as the fourth dimension of space, allowing the creation of a chromatic and material balance between the tense linearity of metallic tubulars, which give rhythm to the composition, the door mass in heat-treated oak, which gives strength to the combination, and the drilled metal sheet, element of fusion and lightness thanks to the union with the light. The latter concept of Beluga philosophy is planarity: the doors with coplanar sliding opening do not hamper, and allow the comfortable access to the inside of the units. The result is a real example of design experience, a sensorial experiment which involves the five senses, a concrete system of open architecture.
